INTRODUCTION.

Time was when people regarded history in a far less serious light than now; then, the Present gave but a questionable echo of past happenings, or as a pulse, told, as best it might, of man's erratic progress in love, art, war, the trades, and learned professions. But our advancement, as a Nation, in its effort to establish itself commercially and socially on an equal footing with those of Europe, proved extremely laborious and slow, so that in a little while those dwelling upon this continent recognized distinctly the fact that there was something wanting, although what, they were unable to discover. Men of all philosophies endeavored strenuously to locate the trouble, but their efforts proved altogether unavailable. Nature certainly was not responsible for these unpleasant conditions, having given to us all of those wonderful advantages in the ownership of which any Nation might feel absolutely secure.

Soil, climate, minerals, were all ours and with plenty to spare.

Neither was it want of brains, opportunity, or means, by which our interest had been so badly handicapped, but simply the fact that we, as a People—a Nation—have heretofore been too young and untried; an known quantity, wanting in former experiences by means of which we might discover our unquestionable right to general recognition. All along, then, it has been a plain case of age—age, wanted as evidence of past endeavor and success acquired. By the outer world we have never been taken altogether seriously, a condition due to this same fact, and practically, it is but a reasonable attitude for others to assume, knowing so little about our ways, and liable, beside—owing to the gross misrepresentation of our National character by a bogus “moneyocracy,” whose apeish ignorance set all Europe a-grin,—to misjudge us as a people. Later, contact with citizen of the truly representative type, did much towards establishing a genuine sentiment of good fellowship, between our people and those of other lands. Indeed, we may say that they know us now at our true value, and are glad that others should be made to understand, that we are their friends.

Library of Congress

At first sight, many readers may fail perhaps, in noting the necessity for so copious a reference to the past, in this work, particularly dealing as it 7 does—almost exclusively—with the people of Wisconsin. Our excuse, however, we consider well-grounded, believing that the subject should be treated as one of general evolution in the National character, and, as such, be made to interpret a broader meaning, which at once releases us from the slightest suspicion of sectional sentiment.

All about us, like conditions have prevailed and been approached with a view to improving the situation, yet nothing came of it, except through the medium of long hard years of professional and industrial effort.

In the earlier period of this Nation's struggle for independence, Europe was simply amused at our puny efforts to become a permanent factor in the world's progress, and never was known to regard us, either as a commercial or social menace. A wealth of watery wastes lay between us, league upon league of ocean separated us and our belonging from those giants of the Old World, who in undisputed possession of centuries of undisputed commercial dominance, had as much faith in the coming of the Millennium as that America and American industries would ever become active factors in a Twentieth Century strife for commercial supremacy.

And this is how matters obtained, until a brief while ago, when there arose an ominous war cloud that came closer and closer, until we were almost lost within the shadowy embrace of its sable folds. Consistent in her want of faith, Europe continued to make merry at our expense, flippantly referring to our arrogance in talking back to a nation like Spain, whose every inspiration came from the accumulated success of centuries, acquired upon the field of battle. How foolish they deemed us time alone may divulge, but it all would be over quickly,—that they knew,—and, as the effort needful to convince us of our error would involve but little additional labor, or expense than the usual “annual maneuvers,” Spain could afford to be generous to a fallen foe.

But, unfortunately for the peace of mind of Knightly doomsters and prophets of evil, they awoke one morning to learn, that the “interesting event” had transpired, though hardly as anticipated. In almost the turning of an hourglass, following the arrival of Dewey in Manila Bay, the story of a great nation's marvelous destiny had been twisted beyond all recognition, while hundreds of the best and bravest of heroic Spain had yielded life itself,—martyr to National pride and in homage also to our own America, self-constituted Apostle of Freedom and home of the brave.

To us in America, it sometimes seems, this miraculous event is never to be regarded in its proper light. Thought ever anxious to be just, particularly with a conquered foe, this overwhelming victory, for the moment, made us morally irresponsible; for we saw nothing, thought of nothing, believed in nothing but the very palpable fact that an enemy, bearing one of the proudest 9 names in all Christendom; a people overwhelmed by the weight of brilliant achievements, both on land and sea, had fallen an easy victim to the prowess of American arms. Never, in all the annals of the World's wars has such a decisive, yet bloodless victory been won. Following this, with hardly a moment's pause, came those other decisive events, terminating as we all know, in the irretrievable defeat and downfall of Spanish supremacy.

And yet, with all these stubborn facts to combat, “the Powers” still hesitated in considering us from a plane of general equality. This fact was made obvious in the flippant methods of “official recognition” and the “amenities” adopted by the German Admiral, Von Deidrichs, whose flag ship lay anchored in the bay at the time of Dewey's arrival, and for some time following. It was at this time that Admiral Dewey was compelled to make heavy drafts upon his latent stores both executive and diplomatic, the same, it appears, proving sufficiently impressive to call forth a prompt apology. The incident closed, these German officers at last realized, that they had been treated to an exhibition of American diplomacy and of what this country could do, in the way of protecting her rights and reputation, should it be necessary, and that, too, without dress rehearsal or other preparation of any kind whatsoever.

To-day, the Nations are politely interested wherever America is the subject of discussion, while her slightest wish, as reflected through the Government at Washington, receives prompt and respectful attention. 'The men behind the guns at Manila and Santiago, the boys that scaled the heights of San Juan,—the American citizen, as soldier or private individual, have earned a courteous hearing from all the world.

But, what is better still, those of other nations have also learned, that while past-masters in the craft of self-protection, we prefer to be recognized for our efforts to gain prestige, in a war for commercial supremacy, where each may emulate his fellow, thus subserving the general interests of all.

A people of composite construction, we have a peculiar advantage over such as almost exclusively dwell within themselves, hence, live but to rehearse and carry on, the same routine observed by those preceding them. This fact was never shown up to better advantage than Wisconsin, when troops were called for, or volunteered their services for the Spanish campaign. Those who witnessed the departure from Camp Harvey, of our boys, for the front, could hardly forget that most affecting scene. It was a splendid array of manhood that passed along in informal review. There was no attempt at display, but on they marched, with steady, swinging stride, large of frame, the light of intelligence vividly reflected upon their clean-cut, determined faces. With the rank and file of our legions, so splendidly endowed, for life's material struggle, what we not except of them when danger threatens? 11 It is pleasant, indeed, to know that conditions like unto those quoted, are almost entirely due to the remarkable school system, as applied to the education of our children, in Wisconsin. Furthermore, to this extremely liberal System is undoubtedly due, the fact of our rapid advancement in all of our undertakings, commercial or otherwise.

Like other great commonwealths having accomplished much, individually towards the nation's general advancement, Wisconsin has also the proud distinction of helping materially, in promoting a healthful, steady scheme to increase the population and develop all natural resources. A distinctive feature, with which in an early day, kind Providence proved unusually lavish, was the high-grade quality of a majority of those who first located in Wisconsin; men whose eminence in professional circles, or fitness for commercial or other business exploits, gave to our state the prestige and recognition that even time cannot eliminate. Her orators have calmed the tempest of prejudice, belond all seeming possibility, her lawyers gained the gracious acquiescence in courts, from the ultimatum of which there is no appealing, her soldiers have ever been among the foremost to offer their services in times of peril, while her fame commercially is recognized the world over.

A work like the present one, "Notable Men of Wisconsin," devoted entirely to portraiture, except for the name, residence and occupation of the subject, may to many seem like a useless extravagance so far as practical results are concerned. But, according to the views of business people, this position is decidedly untenable, due care upon the part of publishers being exercised in seeing to it, that none but those entitled to such recognition, be allowed a place in this gallery of representative citizens. The beneficial side of such a work, when reliable, is the means it affords, for ready reference, the indices being so arranged that the subject, in quest, may be quickly located, either by name, or under a sub-heading of the profession or trade, to which he belongs or represents.

A better understanding, generally, of Wisconsin's relative position, in the combined aggregation of states and as a factor in the spread of influence, how, more than ever, being experienced by the people of the United States, brief reference will be made to our rating, in population and education, as shown by the census of 1900, to which an addition of about 20 per cent. may be made, in order that the result may come somewhat near the increase, that will certainly appear in the forthcoming report, soon to be issued by the department at Washington, for 1902.

Thus, referring to educational matters, the school report, for the year ending May 31, 1900, shows there was a general attendance of 11,674,878. For the same year, in Wisconsin, the percentage of illiteracy was but 6.73.

Another interesting fact is, that the whole number of people engaged in gainful occupations, in the United States, in 1890, was 22,735,661, a percentage of 36.31 of the entire population, or of 47.95 of the population over 10 years of age.

Classed in what is called the "North Central Division," Wisconsin shows a handsome gain in those employed in gainful occupations, between 1881 and 1890, that for the former being 43.23 and for the latter 45.80. Of the others, Indiana, Michigan, Missouri, Illinois and Ohio, alone made slight advances.

Of Wisconsin's population, engaged in gainful occupations in 1890, the official report was as follows: Agriculture, Fisheries and Mining, male 47.69 per cent., female, 7-32; Professions, male, 13.24; female, 2.73; Domestic and Personal, male, 14.78, female 47.87; Trade and Transportation, male, 12.89, female, 5.91; Manufactures and Mechanics, male, 21.91, female, 25.65. One peculiar feature in the report of 1890 was the fact that in twenty-four states and territories, the per cent. of males engaged in agriculture was more than half of the entire number engaged in gainful occupations. The total number thus engaged in the United States and Wisconsin, irrespective of sex, were:

In the U. S. In Wisconsin. Agriculture, Fisheries and Mining 9,013,336 236,138
Professions 944,333 13,545 Domestic and Personal 4,360,577 73,196 Trades and Transportation 3,326,122 63,830 Manufacturers and Mechanics 5,091,293 108,490

An average estimate showing the percentage of city population engaged in gainful occupations results as follows: Milwaukee, 37 per cent.; Buffalo and New Orleans,

Library of Congress

39; Brooklyn, St. Louis, Los Angeles and Newark, 41; Baltimore, Chicago, Cincinnati and Indianapolis, 42; Louisville, St. Paul, Washington and Memphis, 44; New York, Philadelphia, and Atlanta, 45; Boston, Minneapolis and Kansas City, 46; Omaha, 48.

Since the very beginning, Wisconsin enterprises have made remarkable gains, and, in many instances, to a degree beyond all anticipation. Grouped somewhat more closely, yet emblematic of general results, a larger portion of Milwaukee's business undertakings, have also prospered. To the somewhat limited area, then, occupied by the State's metropolis, we will confine this limited resume of what the thrift and energy of the people of Wisconsin has done towards the magnificent general results that have caused the state to be regarded as among the most representative and successful in the entire country.

It is such undeniable records as this, that has made it a pleasant duty for the publishers of the present work, "Notable Men of Wisconsin," to reproduce the likenesses of many of those who have helped in the material upbuilding of the state and who are living to enjoy the results of their labors. And to such,—men of recognized substance and position,—are the pages of this book devoted.

Aided to a marked degree, by Nature's bounteous gifts, the State of Wisconsin and its world renowned metropolis have made substantial gains. Take the latter, for instance, noticeably small, inconsequent place but a brief while ago, to-day it is counted among the most substantial manufacturing centers in the northwest.

Even now, our annual manufactures exceed $200,000,000, the output of from three to four thousand concerns. The employees supported by them are nearly 100,000 strong, the wages they earn amount to hard upon $50,000,000 annually, the capital invested in these establishments amounts to nearly $150,000,000 and the value of the manufactured products, as stated is more than $200,000,000, a gain for the past year of nearly 15 per cent. The character of the goods made is also among the most substantial, including metal working industries, about 500 establishments, a combined capital of from $80,000,000 to a $100,000,000, and an output worth fully 40 to 50 per cent. of the figures. Then there are over 100 leather-working industries, tying up fully $20,000,000 in capital, and producing a total output worth considerably over that figure. The shoe industry is another of the larger features, meat-packing, furniture, paints, stone, men's clothing, and many others.

In addition to all this there is a jobbing trade of more than $300,000,000, an increase of $34,000,000 over the total for 1900. The gain made in the jobbing trade since 1895 is unusually large, the former year showing a total of $182,803,727 against $300,332,207 for 1901. To the above total for 1895, make inclusive the following six years, and we have a jobbing business of $1,608,906,629, an increase of 64.3 per cent., about one-half of the goods sold being the actual product of local industries. Largest among these come drygoods and notions, with an output of nearly $20,000,000, while groceries, tea and coffee are but $107,000 less. The next highest is grain, with a total of nearly eighteen millions and a half.

Receipts and shipments by water are also a prominent feature, the season of 1901, from May to November, showing the total amount of ore shipped as 220,655 tons, against 77,516 tons for the year previous. Coal receipts, last year, were 1,827,633 tons, a gain of 176,191 tons over those in 1900. Other shipments, such as grain, flour, lumber, etc., etc., came, with but few exceptions, in like proportion. Of total arrivals and clearances, at the port of Milwaukee, last year, there were of the former: Steam vessels, 17 4,812; sailing vessels, 894, and total tonnage, 5,341,422; clearances: Steam vessels, 4,769, sailing vessels, 907, total tonnage, 5,237,393. Of flour and grain, the receipts and shipments for 1901 were also very heavy.

Added to this brief general summary, may be given a number of facts indicative of general prosperity, the same, though limited to the city of Milwaukee, being plainly suggestive of the healthy condition of the state, of which it is the metropolis. Thus, Milwaukee banks show a gain in clearings of $29,121,837, and in balances of $4,341,365, the clearings for 1901, 1900 and 1899, respectively, being $327,533,760, $298,311,925, and $286,585,000, and the balances $46,085,901, $41,744,535, and $40,246,000. The healthfulness of Milwaukee is made manifest in the report of the department that shows a death rate of but 13.01 per thousand. Public improvements have also been many, business additions and investment of new capital valuable as to character and amount, demands for the care and sustenance of the city's poor considerably under the general average, and criminal record less, when the noticeable increase in population is taken into consideration.

Still another evidence of general prosperity is the marked increase in interior investments, the year showing a total of $5,950,763, spent on new buildings, an increase of $1,587,712 over 1900. Of that amount $568,784 was expended in residence properties alone.

Here, then, is our apology, should any be necessary, for the appearance of this volume, "Notable Men of Wisconsin," a large proportion of who have been actively identified with every movement, to which may be attributed the progress and well established commercial prestige and strength of the great state of Wisconsin.
